You can choose between programmable digital timers or inexpensive mechanical timers that work using a 24hour dial. Mechanical timers require you to set them manually via segments, pins or trippers; they don't require backup batteries. To operate them, twist the dial clockwise to the desired setting such as 45 minutes.

The timer ticks like a clock during the countdown until it reaches the zero setting on the dial. When it reaches the off point, it dings or rings to let you know the time you set has passed. When the dial reaches a pin or tripper, the light comes on and stays on until the timer advances to the next trip or pin position on the dial. Most 24hour timers have 48 positions, one at the clock hour and one at the half hour. Each timer is slightly different, but most come with an override that permits the electrical current to bypass the timer so that you can operate the light manually when you don't want the timer to control it. Plug in your light, aquarium or other electrical item you want to control into the plug socket of the timer, usually found on the bottom, side or front of the timer. For example, if you want the timer to turn a light on at 7 p.m., set the first pin at that position on the dial and the second at 1100 p.m. if that is when you want it to shut off. For timers with 24 hour clocks, you would set the first pin at 1900 and the second pin at 2300. Pins are set by toggling them off or on, or in or out. Advance it to the Off position to verify the light turns off. Reset the timer to the current time after testing. They come equipped preset to turn lights on and off at random times to make it appear as if you are home when you're away. The on and off pins or trips are molded onto these mechanical timers; many vacation timers have seven-day, random on and off settings that repeat after seven days have passed. Simply push up on these segments each segment usually represents a half hour so that they raise above the timer's face. For example if you want the light to come on at 7 p.m. and off at 11 p.m., as per the previous example, lift eight segments beginning at 7 p.m. and ending at 1100 p.m. Some segment timers require you to push the segment down and out instead of up. The pins are built into the dial itself.

Follow the steps for the analog timer, pulling the pins out at the location you want to turn the item on and off. Green pins represent the time on position, while the red arrow-type pins represent the time off position. Depending on the model of timer you have, when the switch is set to the Timer or Auto position, electricity flows through the timer to the light and turns it on and off at the times you set it. When the timer is toggled to the Off position, the timer or the electrical device won't operate. In the On position, this generally means you can operate the electrical device manually without the timer interfering with the current to the device. Some timers have a switch you toggle between two positions Timer On or Outlet On. She has written for newspapers, magazines, online publications and sites.
