Tonight, an era for CWâs Riverdale came to a close with the airing of the highly anticipated episode of the series "Chapter Seventy-Nine: Graduation". The episode â originally intended to serve as the finale of the fourth season, before the COVID-19 pandemic delayed. production of the series for several months in 2020 â undoubtedly has a lot of emotions behind it. The episode not only sees members of the high school cast graduating from Riverdale High School, but also contains a series of stories the show had in the pipeline, before the show jumped seven years into the future in subsequent episodes. As fans saw in tonight's episode, that turning point â and the time leap that will follow â has an impact on just about every character in Riverdale's world. Among them is Fangs Fogarty (Drew Ray Tanner), a Riverdale high school student and member of Southside Serpent, who has become a fan favorite since his debut in season two. With Tanner's promotion to regular status in October last year, Riverdale viewers certainly didn't see the latest Fangs, as did his relationship with Kevin Keller (Casey Cott). To celebrate the debut of "Graduation", ComicBook.com had the opportunity to talk to Tanner about the show's monumental moment, as well as what fans can expect for Fangs once the time jump takes effect. We also talked about filming this season in the middle of the ongoing pandemic, how Fangs evolved over the course of the show and much more! (Photo: LISA OâCONNOR/AFP via Getty Images, The CW) ComicBook.com: What was your reaction to reading the script for this episode? Drew Ray Tanner: First of all, the writers have done a great job of summarizing the last four years for the characters, what it means to them, and also what it means to be teenagers. I think they did a great job. It was pretty compelling, and it was also a little different from what you're forced to think about your time. And I think that goes for anyone who reads something like that, regardless of demographics, it's something to learn. That's what I felt when I read it. It was something I couldn't put down. prevnext How was shooting this episode, after so long due to production stoppages? There's definitely one more emotional core to the episode, given everything that's happened in the last year. No doubt about it. I think it's interesting to talk about it, because it's true, right? Nothing says "you've changed" like a global pandemic and a year away from your job. That puts things in perspective. It was interesting because even though we weren't working and the world was closed, we all had a great time in our lives to look on the bright side. Most of the cast worked on the show guite consistently in the Five years, almost. We've been given a pass to get aand feel like children again. I think when we got back to film, we said, "Oh, right. We grew up as adults," and then you're in the world of Riverdale. And with the COVID restrictions and such things, it made it clear that things are different, and it is not like life before. Speaking personally, I was a bit curious about how we would face [intitity]. As an actor, the intimacy is the number one thing, so I asked myself: "How will we play?" But they did a great job making it very simple, and you see it in the episodes. I think they're better than ever, which is great. I think if we'd jumped into it, it'd be a little different. Everything happens for a reason, you know? prevnext How was it for you to see Fangs evolve so much since he debuted on the show? If I had to read the book of his life and all the chapters that preceded me, there was a very pleasant start and destination. As I see it, he came in a way looking for something -- that was the band, the family, the fact that it was just an acceptance, I think it was what he was looking for. I felt very good because I felt the same thing when I was her age, I just wanted to be accepted for him. And this was the guiding thread for me when I approach this character, that acceptance is an important part of him. I think he really wanted to find his place. He began to form around the musical episode, because he attends a new school and feels more comfortable, and it's okay to be in a musical and it's okay to be gay. You will come to see this flower bloom in this period. So now, when we arrive at the graduation episode, we begin to see full optimization, where it is surrounded by friends and people with which it will be staying for a long time. I think it's beautiful how things went for him. It could have gone a lot differently for a guy like him and instead, it worked great. I felt very close because I had a similar experience as a child. prevnext Passing to the jump in time, Roberto [Aguirre-Sacasa] teased when you were promoted to the regular series Fangs would be roommate with Kevin and Toni. I'm really curious to know what you can make fun of this dynamic, because it looks like the next extension of the found family you were talking about. Yeah, no doubt. What can I do? If you've ever lived with two other roommates, it's like this. If you've ever lived with a couple, it's like this. It's very interesting. The way they deal with their day is cool. There's a lot of movie nights, there's some drama, and nothing's perfect. If you've ever lived a couple, if you've ever lived a couple, if you've ever lived a couple, if you've ever lived with two other people, when there's a lot of movie nights, there's a drama within it, it can be hard to navigate that space. Fangs wants something different from his relationship with Kevin, and so it creates an interesting elevator in the house. Prevnext For you, from a creative point of view, how did the time jump hit you as you play Fangs? Not many actors really get the opportunity to play a character at two completely different stages of their lives. Especially when it wasn't something that was relatively known from the beginning -- I wouldn't be surprised if Roberto had had this plan all this time, but I never knew it. It wasn't something I was getting ready to do. You have seven years to fill in the gaps, as well as the actor, it was extremely exciting, because there is so much that you can do creatively at that time for a sort of bridge help that. I think I heard about the pre-pandemic time jump. So when the pandemic happened, we knew we'd be back filming, and it would be a little faster than this jump. So they gave me nine months to grow my hair and grow as an individual. I kept it in the back of my mind every day as I was going through this life-changing thing. It was a huge thing. I don't think anything big happened in my life, since graduation or anything like that. As an actor, the best characters to learn from everyday life. The best characters to learn are people on the road and everyday interactions. You're constantly adding things to the tool belt. This is the actor's task, to take life and imitate it with hope in art. So I was extremely blessed that I had [so much time]. As a TV actor, you don't get that much time to do something like that, but we were really given nine months to figure it out and be aware of "Okay, this is where we're going with this. How do I make this character real? And how do I make a sort of seamless transition?" It was extremely exciting. It was extremely exciting. It was given more time to prepare. Prevnext How was it to see the response from fandom so far this season? It feels like the pandemic and the long hiatus has made the audience resonating with it differently. Yeah. I think it's an extension of... The main storyline of everyone's life has been that we are going through this pandemic and we really desperately want to get back to our way of life. There are so many things we take for granted. I think the underpass of this is the shows we watch, the content we consume, and going to the movies and going to the movies and that sort of thing. Riverdale has always been an escapist show. He's always been a kind of which could exist in any age. I think people realized "Wow, this show has really [provided] a lot of loopholes, especially at a time like this, when people need it more than ever". *** Ocomments Riverdale airs on Wednesdays at 8/7c on CW.
