Downloading videos is considered a violation of YouTube's Terms of Service, unless the video streaming site has explicitly granted permission to download a particular video. This guide features an easytouse desktop app known as 4K Video Downloader. This app is available for Windows, MacOS 10.13 or later, and Ubuntu. Once the installer has downloaded, run it to get the app installed on your computer. This is one of the most versatile and simpletouse download tools available, and it will work with all of your files regardless of your computer's display resolution. The free version of this software has the ability to download individual videos at customizable qualities all the way up to 4K, has support for 3D and 360degree videos, and can download subtitles. With the URL locked and loaded in your clipboard, you can close the window or tab of the video. There's no need to manually paste in the URL — just click on the Paste Link button in the topleft corner of the menu bar and the software will grab the URL from your computer's clipboard. You can also adjust the download location of the video, and the application will create a folder that contains all of your downloaded videos. Note that the video the software grabs will be based on your IP address, not the URL you input, so VPN users may need to change their location to download the right version. You'll then be shown a progress page that details download size, download speed, and estimated time remaining. You can pause the download at any time. Once the download is complete, select your video from the window and a vertical threedots icon should appear on the right side of the window. Click on that icon, and a menu should pop up.

From that menu, select Show in Folder to find where on your computer the new video was saved. Digital Trends may earn a commission when you buy through links on our site.
