It applies to Air National Guard and Air Force Reserve units and members. Drill consists of certain movements by which a military unit is moved in an orderly manner from one formation to another or from one place to another. Everywhere you and your flight go in basic training, you'll march in formation. Everywhere! Most of all drill is instilling discipline and order in each individual in the flight small unit. You cannot get from A to B without moving together as a team. First and foremost, the military is a team, and being able to conform to the team's standards is critical to all members of the military. These are sung during nonformal marching events typically done when traveling or running as a group. Here are some of the parade drill movements you will be tasked with learning and performance perfectly as a group in unison. Changes to illustrations are indicated by miniature pointing hands or black vertical lines. The use of the letter E or F indicates the change is in English or French only. When it came to drill and ceremonies, the newly created service looked at the Marine Corps and Army drill manuals and chose from what it considered the best from each most from the MCO. One thing the USAF eventually left out beginning in approximately the 1970s was the manual of arms for the rifle. Why Because the Army and Marine Corps had already accomplished that task and Airmen did not have a daily use for rifles like Soldiers and Marines. We march, have military parades, color guards, and change of command ceremonies, so the USAF creating a drill and ceremonies manual with specifics for the Element, Flight, Squadron, Group, and Wing, was logical. However, both guards of a color guard were armed with sidearms because most teams were manned solely by Air Police. Look at the right arm holds the flagstaff. Notice the flag and staff size. Still, the right arms are holding the flagstaffs at Carry. However, there isn't any guidance for the team's spacing.

Notice in the pictures below that the right arm is still holding the staff and we now have the horizontal right forearm. Even though the manual now states that the team will form at Close Interval, spacing is a bit mixed up depending on the position of the team Carry, Order, etc.. We now have the first AFMAN 362203. The team is now, wrongly, shouldertoshoulder even though the text states the team will form at Close Interval. In each picture, the right hand is still the only one authorized to hold the staff. Historically, these teams so far have met the standards. This manual was the standard until it incorporated Change 1 in 2007. The version with Change 1 was then the standard until 2013. In 2013, we throw in a huge discrepancy. This isn't authorized, see AFI 341201. The larger flag is mounted on the taller staff only. Out of the clear blue sky, the color bearers, for some unknown reason, are holding the staffs with the left hand while at Carry. There is not reason to use the left hand only carry technique. Nowhere in USAF, Army, or Marine Corps history can I find any color guard that ever utilized it. At the carry, the ferrule of the staff rests in the socket of the sling. The flag bearer grasps the staff with the right hand at the height of the shoulder, only using the left hand to steady the staff in a strong wind. The staff is inclined slightly to the front. Emphasis mine AFMAN 362203 2013 Every picture shows the team shouldertoshoulder and then, BAM. Wait a minute. That mistake with using the picture of having the color bearers use the left hand at carry is less expensive to fix if you just change the wording! At the carry, the ferrule of the staff rests in the socket of the sling. The flag bearer grasps the staff with the left hand at the height of the shoulder, only using the right hand to steady the staff in a strong wind. The staff is inclined slightly to the front.

Emphasis mine AFMAN 362203 2018 We do not hold the staff with the left hand and we definitely don't just throw that out on a whim without serious repercussions. Only the right hand holds the flagstaff. While still using USAF techniques pictured in the AFMAN Explain that the MCO must be used for the guards since they have the rifles on the outside shoulder. This is not determined by the type of rifle. Make sure this account has posts available on instagram.com. This is often, but not always, followed by an implicit Relax Rest. This is the only position that actually offers soldiers freedom of movement. Soldiers are typically allowed to move other than moving their feet, though, when it is given by a high ranking officer, soldiers typically move a minimal amount after a bit of stretching. At the same time, all members of the formation snap their heads so they are facing right. After this, they pause, and then shuffle back to a new position, where their hand is extremely close to the soldiers shoulder on their right, unless otherwise specified. The American version of this is called Dress Right, DRESS. At the same time, all members of the formation snap their heads so they are facing left. After this, they pause, and then shuffle back to a new position, where their hand is extremely close to the soldiers shoulder on their right, unless otherwise specified. The American version of this is called Dress Left, DRESS. This is used so that dressing is off the colours. The formations to the left of the Colour Party will dress to the right and the formations to the right of the Colour Party will dress to the left. All personnel to the right of the Colours in front row and left column except the left marker take one step forward, pause, and only the front rank bring up their left arms parallel to the ground. At the same time, all members of the formation snap their heads so they are facing left.

All personnel to the left of the colours in front row and right side column except the right marker take one step forward, pause, and only the front rank bring up their right arms parallel to the ground. At the same time, all members of the formation snap their heads so they are facing right. Soldiers without weapons use a salute appropriate for their headdress. The soldiers will loosen the sling so they can now have their rifles strapped around their shoulders. Soldiers will load the rifle with the blank round in preparation of the Feu de joie, French for Fire of Joy in parades. This is called in Polish as the Salwa Honorowa or Honor Volley. In times, the accompanying bugle call for it is used before the order is done. The troops pull out their bayonets from their uniforms and attach them to the weapon. When this command is said the parade prepares in readiness for the march past. Two, three, up. Two, three, down. The arms will be lowered back to their normal position on the commands Order ARMS. They can also salute if given the command Hand SALUTE. The parade leader salutes while looking in the direction they gave. They are lowered in the same amount of time elapsed between the two words. On this very command the unit being reviewed advances 15 paces and halts automatically before presenting arms to the reviewing officer. This is a simple, ceremonial letting fly and catching of the colours. This slants the colours forward sufficiently to negate this, and they are brought back up afterward. It is caught and guided into its frog with the left hand, which is then returned to its side. The cautionary and executive are both called on the left foot. The left leg is then brought up to be parallel to the ground although exceptions are made for kilted regiments and slammed into the ground in the position of attention. This motion is done at a particular fixed point. The right leg is then brought up to be parallel to the ground and slammed down into attention.

This motion is done at a particular fixed point. United States units do not make exaggerated gestures with the legs or arms. Members shall bend the left knee, straighten it in double time and smartly place the left foot beside the right to assume the position of attention. In the Royal Navy heel movements are the same for Right Face. The way the march is performed depends on the regiments nationality. The standard pace is 65 beats per minute. It creates a travel speed of approximately double that of Quick Time, designed to be used even when carrying heavy burdens. It can not be given from the halt. The soldier will draw a cartridge. Cartridges consist of a spherical lead bullet wrapped in a paper cartridge which also holds the gunpowder propellant. The bullet is separated from the powder charge by a twist in the paper. The soldier should pour a small pinch of the powder from the cartridge into the priming pan. He should then close the frizzen so that the priming powder is trapped. The butt of the musket is then dropped to the ground by the left foot with the trigger guard facing to the rear and the soldier having just poured the rest of the powder into the barrel. Once all of the powder is poured into the barrel, the soldier should have stuffed the paper and the ball into the barrel, the paper acts as wadding to keep the gunpowder in the barrel and also packing it down. The soldier should draw his ramrod from below the barrel. First forcing it half out before seizing it backhanded in the middle, followed by drawing it entirely out, while simultaneously turning it to the front and placing it one inch into the barrel. He should then use the ramrod to firmly ram the bullet, wadding, and powder down to the bottom followed by tamping it down with two quick strokes. The ramrod is then returned to its hoops under the barrel. Then the musket is returned to the shoulder arms position.

The musket is brought to the recover position held vertically in front of the body with the trigger guard facing forward and the cock hammer is drawn back to the fullcock position. Because of the size of the companies and the general noise of battle, these commands could be and were often communicated through specialized drum beatings. The main advantage of the British Redcoat was that he trained at this procedure almost every day. The standard for the British Army was the ability to load and fire three rounds per minute. A skilled unit of musketeers was often able to fire four rounds per minute. The movements sideways or at angles, the pirouettes, etc., were the movements needed for massed cavalymen to form and reform and deploy. The Royal Canadian Mounted Polices Musical Ride gives an inkling of what massed cavalry drill at speed would have looked like.
