Depends on how much upper back support is needed, and also affects freedom for the upper body to rotate. A tighter angle allows the wheelchair to turn around in less space. Depends in part on ability of the knee to bend towards the perpendicular. Consider bulk of clothing, particularly a heavy winter coat, if relevant. More camber improves stability and agility, but also limits ability to pass through narrow spaces. A typical daily wheelchair uses three degrees of camber. Then subtract the thickness of the cushion when it is compressed. Next, add a minimum of two inches for footrest clearance. <http://fxwuye.com/upload/craftsman-12-volt-250-psi-air-compressor-inflator-manual.xml>

Susie Wetherald 4.0 out of 5 stars I ordered it for my father, who my husband and I care for at home. He recently had major surgery and is pretty fragile at this time. The problem with this particular item is the way it is shipped. It came by UPS, with only one person to lift it off. The box was totally ripped and torn and open. I sent the first one back because the package was so damaged and when the second one came I swear it looked like the same box, it was heavily damaged.

But I took it because I needed it. It has a bent leg but it works. And it is comfortable for my dad, and easy to maneuver. The holes for the sides were drilled in the wrong place, the tray will not work, parts missing. Absolute disappointment!! The chair worked wonderfully during meal times and the tray that it comes with is sturdy and very useful. The chair reclines all the way back if someone wanted to rest or take a nap however the tray has to be removed after the second recline position. The chair is very sturdy and built solid. With free prime shipping it was a great deal. Then got a second one in green that i do not want. Did not order two chairs. Couldnt have shipped it back if I needed to. Some parts were bent, had to repair myself. Chair itself good quality. The plastic piece that holds the table in came broken! The frame is crooked making it difficult for me to lock it into place. The reclining foot rest doesnt close all the way and its difficult. Ill probably order a different one. One that is hopefully of better quality. It was a bad purchase. Foot elevation mechanism is a bit stiff, requires assistance for patient to raise leg support. The chair has three positions consisting of upright, reclined, and reclined with leg rests up. The headrest also pushes forward to help the user to lower their head if they wanted to read or eat. This provides maximum comfort for users who might like to take a nap in their chair. The back wheels lock and roll easily to transport the user from place to place and ensure the chair can't roll away, but they do not wheel that easily on soft surfaces like carpeting. Once you recline the chair, you have to remove the tray because it sits close to the user's legs. If you try and recline it when occupied, you most likely will pinch their legs. The tray is also textured, so it isn't a good surface if the user needs to write. Overall, this is the best option for senior or their loved ones looking for a Geri chair with a tray that provides comfort and assistance when it comes to care. The only downside is that there is no groin strap so you still can slide down with the strap on. It comes in a variety of sizes, so it will fit on most models of Geri chair without discomfort for the user. With this design, however, there is the chance that the user could still slide down and the strap could work its way off. If there were some way to run a strap through the groin area, we feel this would be a much more functional product. However, with any Geri chair or product designed to help seniors, you should always gauge their personal comfort before deciding if it is the best product for them. FABRIC Offered in four fabric options with different features to meet your needs.

Navy TASLON waterresistant fabric provides patient. SIZE Available in short length or full length for extra skin protection by the leg area, especially from cuts or bruises caused by. INSTRUCTIONS Place NYOrtho GeriChair Comfort Seat on geri chair and fasten hook and loop straps around the geri chair to secure. Using a buffer like this helps to relieve pressure points where you may need additional support. This could be a great choice for seniors with aches and pains that come with aging, such as hip and back pain. For those with arthritis in their legs or knees, it can also take a lot of pressure off of the usual points that would usually be stressed when sitting in a chair. Before deciding to make a purchase, you'll need to make sure the dimensions line up with your chair unless you do not mind configuring the pads a little. You can also position the leg rests out vertically in order to elevate your legs. This three-position chair is the best option if you know your or a loved one will be spending extensive periods of time in the chair, since it will allow the user to sit upright and eat or interact with others as well as lay back to nap or relax. The fabric on the seat prevents you from sliding around, so if the user has an issue holding themselves up this chair definitely will help to prevent them from sliding around too much. The primary issue we found is that the trays are on the side of the chair. There is a gas cylinder release handle that you operate from either side of the chair. This means that the user can finally move the chair themselves without needing help. This is a big issue for geriatric chairs because usually, the person sitting cannot reach the handles to recline themselves. There are two trays with this Geri chair, but both of them are on the side of the chair with no way to get them to the front. For someone who is disabled and needs a geriatric chair, this does not make any sense.

To eat this would require the user to turn to get their food which is not logical for a lot of people. It fits most geri chairs and offers extra padding to the areas that need it most. Product is reversible.

Covered with a soft launderable Cozy Cloth fabric comfortable on any existing Geri Chair. Available in two models one with and one without legrest protection. This listing includes leg rests Designed not to slip or bunchup and covers metal chair components to reduce cuts and bruises We feel this is one of the best Geri chair pads because it provides sufficient support for users' legs without making it too hard to get out of the chair. Other pads might be too thick, making it more difficult for seniors to get out of their Geri chair after relaxing. It provides just the right amount of cushion without causing any difficulty getting in and out of the Geri chair. It can be folded up and moved around as needed. It offers three positions from fully reclined to fully upright and has both headrests and leg rests. This is a simple, comfortable chair for someone who doesn't need a lot of bells and whistles with their Geri chair, or might even be using one temporarily due to some type of illness or injury. The chair has four wheels that make it easy to move it around, and it has a push bar behind so you can transport the user from place to place if you're a caregiver. The handle is tight to operate, and even for a young healthy person, and it took quite a bit of strength to adjust the position of the chair. It definitely would not be a good option if you are a senior looking for a Geri chair that you could recline on your own, as it could be dangerous to exert too much force on the handle. Deciding which type of chair is best depends solely on the users habits and what they like to do. If you find that they're more comfortable sleeping in more of an upright position in their chair, then you may not need to worry about getting an option that fully reclines.

If the user is also able to transfer from their Geri chair to a bed in order to sleep, then you also would not need to worry about getting a chair that reclines all the way. If the person you are caring for has trouble moving their own neck, a chair with this position would allow them to gently look down so they could eat, read, or conduct other necessary activities. If they like to read and eat in their chair, but they also take naps and watch TV, then having a chair with four different positions might be necessary for you. Their use of the chair will also come into play. If they have very limited mobility and need to be in the chair for most or all of the day, having more positions would be beneficial to relieve pressure points that can occur after sitting in the same positions for extended periods of time. You want to make sure they are happy, and the chair improves their quality of life. The padding should be strategically placed to help with common pressure points, such as knees, hips, lower back, and neck. If you are buying the chair online, you won't be able to test it out yourself to feel how comfortable it is, but remember to pay attention to user and take a good look at certain areas of the chair. If these areas have padding on them, then you can almost guarantee that the padding used on the back and the rear area will be sufficient as well. It's critical that you keep the chair clean and free from bacteria because the senior user of the chair will be older and more susceptible to infection. With removable sides, you can make sure there is nothing getting stuck, and you can easily access the padding to wipe everything down. Most chairs also come with antimicrobial upholstery that prevents bacteria buildup and is easy to wipe off.

Especially if the senior has limited mobility or might be suffering from a disease or injury, a Geri chair allows them to maintain their comfort while going about their daily lives with dignity and remaining levels of independence.
