0 out of 5 stars This label maker is not nearly as good as the ones of years ago. Most importantly, the letters are much smaller than the older label makers output. As a result, the letter quality is not as good. When I saw the output from this DYMO, I thought I was misremembering what the output from this kind of label maker looked like. So I bought a ROTEX 880 for twenty one ninety nine incl shipping from eBay. I just received it, put tape in it I used one of the extra rolls of black tape that came with the Dymo and the output of the ROTEX 880 is exactly what I had hoped for. See attached photo. The DYMO is a lightweight plastic thing. That wouldnt be a problem if it stamped a quality tape. The labels are just freaking adorable. The bad reviews are in my opinion mostly user error. Except of course for the ones where the machine is broken. Once I select the character I want, I use both hands to squeeze the trigger and hold for a couple of seconds before releasing and the embossing comes out very nicely. The labels are definitely on the smaller side, smaller than I thought but they still work great for labeling smaller items. If you're labeling larger things you might want to spring for the larger model. Or even if you're just more spendy than me, the larger seemed too expensive for me. The labels have really good stickiness. It takes me forever to take the back off but that's because I have very short nails and very bad coordination. It doesn't feel sturdy. The label maker is very lightweight and feels cheap. If I dropped it on hard flooring I think it might break altogether or maybe that the back cover where the tape loads might pop off for good since it feels delicate. For the price I don't mind, I don't expect it to last forever and when it does break I will buy another one. If you look at my SAMPLE 1 in my pictures you can see that you should definitely put a space AFTER your last character or the label gets cut too short.<http://daiduongcompany.com.vn/uploads/userfiles/deutz-f3l2011-parts-manual.xml>

If you look at SAMPLE 2 you can see that white shadow on the upper left corner. If you don't want that marking on your label, put a space BEFORE your first character and AFTER your last character. If you look at SAMPLE 3, you can see it's not as clearly embossed as when I use two hands to squeeze the trigger. If you add a space at the end before cutting, your label will come out better looking as well. However, I do wish it comes with a different font. If you want precise, evenly spaced, perfect labels this probably isn't for you, but I bought it for the oldschool feel and it fulfilled my need. The letter dial is easy to use, as is the cutter function. They are sticky enough to adhere to the surface, but not so adhered that they're impossible to get off. Some other reviewers said it stopped working after a couple of uses, but I'm 50 labels in and it's still working great. A couple of tips based on the bad reviews I read I found pressing down really hard on the clamp made the letters worse. Just squeeze the clamp until it clicks and the letters will come out fine. When cutting your label, I pressed down halfway first to get better spacing between the last letter and the end of the label, before clamping all the way down to cut the strip. I'm trying to do so in the least tackiest way possible, though. I had originally decided to get one of these label makers to label my Fujifilm Instax mini pictures, and it works great. I also decided to label a few other things, hence my craziness. I haven't had any problems with it at all. My only suggestion is to spin the wheel in one way; if you start clockwise, keep going clockwise and vice versa. Please see my pics below sorry that they're sideways. I also added a little tidbit in one of my pics about the gun cuts and perforation. I was only able to use it for up to two rolls of labelling. It broke twice. The first time I was able to fix it, but the second time it bugged, and it's a gonner.

The first problem was caused by the way the tape gets cut. There is always a little piece that gets cut after you tear your label off the labelmaker. If you do not hold the device down, shake out these little pieces, they will get stuck underneath the lid which does not come off easy without breaking the device and they will stop any further embossing to take place. The cutting mechanism for the labels is dull so the start and finish of the label you are intending on making has scratches or bends which make white marks on them because you have to sloppily tear away the label. It is not easy to load because it takes a certain gesture and placement of the ribbons for them to catch and get started in the first place. The only thing I like about this label maker is that the labels gave the retro look I was going for but now I am stuck with two rolls of this tape and it appears that this is the only labelmaker like it on the market. The device is easy to use and the label stays on strong. I don't like how close it cuts to the last letter. I do not have any problems with it yet but other reviews show problems after multiple use. I didn't like the package and some scratches that is on the device. I'm gifting the second one so I hope it does not have scratches like mine. Please try again. Please try again. I followed guides and watched YouTube videos to make sure I was doing it right. Now I lost a roll of tape and my labeler doesn't work anymore. I put it away for a while and tried pulling it out with a new roll of tape. Yeah, another roll of tape. wasted! Would not recommend this product. Before it stopped working I really enjoyed the quality of the labels but the actual label maker. not great quality. It's a huge hit in the workplace. We've literally been labeling EVERYTHING Count me as one satisfied customer!. One quibble The letterspacing between embossures seems overly generous, and Id like to know whether its adjustable maybe by some internal setting of the tape feed mechanism in the way of saving tape and improving readability. Im quite capable of disassembling and reassembling the device if necessary to make such an alteration, but I'd like to know in advance what to expect. Hey, somebody needed to step in and offset the two downright dismal reviews from the manually challenged that have stained this item's webpage so far.. Best regards Don't waste your money. The 320mm long x 130mm wide x 120mm high tool has a circular window, a pointer for quick and unambiguous character selection and a springloaded label cutter with integral safety guard. Character height is 4.76mm. The marking process produces a permanent, deep surface mark which is resistant to weather extremes, high levels of UV light and corrosion. Specifically designed for identifying cables, cable markers are essential in conduit and bundles.

They not only assist engineers and technicians with identifying wires or cables, but they also assist with health, safety and effective maintenance. How you use a cable marker can vary, as their method of application can differ. Adhesive and self-laminating are generally used for terminated wires, they wrap around the wire with a clear protective layer. Clip and slide on labelling are generally colour coded or preprinted with letters, numbers and symbols. The single characters can also be combined to create a legend. Some are straight, some are chevron shaped. Whilst slide on markers need to be applied pre-termination, clip-on can be applied after termination. Heat shrink, shrunk to fit the cable are flexible, durable and do not fall off. Tie on tags or markers can generally be used on larger bundles. RS offers a large range of cable ties, markers, labels and kits. We will then check our stores to see if we have the volume you are looking for.
