Indeed B'Twin's Count 8 is the first magnetic one I have used in a very long time. Passez a l'Atelier de votre magasin DECATHLON pour entretenir votre velo et faire. The Count 4 is as pareddown as they come, with just four functions current speed, partial distance trip, total distance, and time of day. It also weighs just 60g. Fatter shafts or 35mm mountain bike bars are likely to be a stretch too far though. The long, narrow head unit puts the bigdigit twoline display out in front of the bar for improved visibility. It works fine on most bikes, but can be tricky to align on very thin fork blades. It also needs to sit within 5mm of the passing spoke magnet which, incidentally, works fine on both bladed and round spokes. If you're replacing the battery, you can reenter your total distance so as not to lose it. The computer is controlled by three intuitive, glovefriendly buttons and depressing a flimsy feeling lever on the mount releases the head unit for when you leave the bike locked up. Like any computer that relies on counting wheel revolutions, it's only as accurate as the wheel size you input, but if you're anal about that kind of thing you can always do a rollout test as detailed in the manual to get it spot on. Originally a roadie, he likes bikes and kit of every stripe, and hes tested a huge variety of both over the years for BikeRadar, Cycling Plus and others. For a long time Matthews heart belonged to the Scott Addict, but hes currently enjoying Specializeds sublime Roubaix Expert and having a torrid affair with a Giant Trance eMTB. At 174cm tall and 53kg, he looks like he should be better at cycling than he actually is, and hes ok with that.
