Cleaning the head seems to solve it many times. So after I put the cleaned out printhead back in, I did the trick again where u power it off when the carriage is half way to the left, remove power and apply power. If I closed the cover, the B200 error would eventually come back. I asked the customer if he had spare cartridges, and he did, so he bought them over, we put them in, tried again, and same B200 error. I told him its likely a print head, and he may try ordering one thru ebay or something to give that a try. Apparently there are microelectronics inside these heads. Beats me how they control or regulate ink flow. On the back of the head there are about 50 contact pads, which I guess must be sensors of some kind. He did say he took the head out at one point, and perhaps ESD may have damaged some sensitive circuitry in there, and now the head is out of spec. I thought I saw some russian videos jumpering some of the pads on the head to bypass the code. anyone have any success.
