Or select 0.1fps and 10s duration It would be great to have mode, in which slowest shutter speed in auto mode could be. And it has stood up well for a long time, no problems. Must admit I spent more time with the user manual for this camera than I have spent with any other user manual. Well worth it in the end. The high speed 60fps and 3001200fps movie modes are endlessly useful for wildlife photography, which is what I use it for. Problems iso above 400 has far too much noise focusing can be a bit slow need bright light for high speed movies 1080p movies can not be edited on my mac IQstills Even in RAW there is a noticeable lack of sharpness and crisp. Even old Canon Gseries was ways better than the F1. Highspeed videos. Im looking to integrate high speed footage into videos otherwise shot in high def on Panasonic HVX200 but intended for web viewing. Im in love with the 50 fps shooting the HVX200 can do and couldnt resist the chance to try really highspeed shooting.As this is a way from house, I found that by using a 62mm to 55mm stepping ring I could fit the telephoto adapter which I have for my Panasonic FZ50 it works perfectly. I have had no problems setting up the auto activate system when the bird enters or leaves the site, just a bit of experimenting required. The RAW facility is of very limited use, as it will not work with any of the advanced features and is very slow. The EXF1 provides several unique features that enhance my ability to catch dramatic stills and videos. Sample images and a more complete review are at payloadbay.com.
