As the apparent movement of the sun is caused by the road rotation, one day, therefore, the time period that the earth requires delivering once on its axis in the sun. In daily use, one day is equal to 24 hours. For astrobs, they use the outer time (based on the land movement in relation to the stars), one day is 23 hours, 56 minutes, 4.09 seconds. The duration of the day is gradually increasing as the seals retard the thread of the earth. In 100 years, one day will be about 1/1000 of a second longer than now. The word day is frequently used to signify the daylight period between the sunrise and the sunshine, as distinct at night, when the sun is below the horizon. Near the Ecuador, this daylight period is about 12 hours throughout the year. In other places, the days vary in length during the year, being longer in spring and summer, and shorter in autumn and winter. In the northern hemisphere, the longest day occurs around June 21 and the shortest day in December 22. The deadline may also mean any period of 24 hours.
