Just press and hold for 3-4 seconds, the UI Tuner System will be activated, and you should see a popup, which tells you that it was enabled. Now, the System UI Tuner option appears at the bottom of the Settings menu. Tap on it and rotate "Show battery percentage embedded" on, UI Tuner System That's it. Unfortunately, Android doesn't show you exactly how much battery you have left, just a vague graph. Here's how to add a more accurate percentage to that icon. You can always see the percentage of your battery by dragging down into the notification bar twice, but that doesn't give you exactly "at a glance" monitoring. You can activate the battery percentage always on Android 6.0 Marshmallow with a somewhat hidden configuration, and on 4.4 KitKat and 5.0 Lollipop with a very hidden configuration. How to Show Your Battery Percentage on Android Marshmallow To activate this feature on Marshmallow, you will have to enable Marshmallow's "System UI Tuner", which gives you access to some hidden settings. Throw down the notification tone and then pull down a second time to display the quick setup panel. (You can also pull the notification screen down with two fingers to display this panel.) Find the configuration gear at the top Press this gear icon for a few seconds until it starts to rotate. Drop your finger, and you'll see an emerging window that tells you that the System UI Tuner was enabled. Touch the System UI Tuner option in the Settings window that appears and accept the warning that appears. On the System UI Tuner page, activate «Show percentage of embedded battery» The battery icon will display your charging level at all times. How to show the percentage of your battery on Android KitKat and Lollipop KitKat and Lollipop really have this integrated function, but the configuration is even more hidden. In fact, the stage does not exist at all! The only way to disable it is with a few ADB commands, or the Battery Percentage Enabler app of the Google Play Store. You don't need to be rooted or anything to use it, so most KitKat and Lollipop phones find it works with the following instructions. open google play store on your phone (or head to google play store on your computer.) computer. )and look for the battery percent of the enabler. Select the application of "Kroegerma" (there are some applications with the same name). You can also click this link to go directly to the Battery Weak page on your computer or phone. Click the "Install" button to install it on your device. (If you are doing this from a desktop browser, make sure you have selected the correct device from the drop-down list.) Once installed, click the "Open" button that appears (or browse to the application in your app drawer). Check the " " and restart your phone and restart your phone. After you restart your phone, you should find that the Android battery icon shows how much charge it has. However, there is one drawback: on some phones, the percentage text is white, the same color as the battery icon. So, you can only see the percentage of the battery if your battery is more than half of the half, so the white text is on the empty grey background. Of course, this was an unfinished feature for KitKat and Lollipop (probably because it was hidden!) But it's still better than nothing. There are many other apps that add battery percentage to the menu bar, but they show up as their own separate notifications, not part of Android's built-in battery. We believe that the above solution is the best for Pre-MasRSHMallow phones.
